

Preferred Source Types

Many authors use both scholarly journal articles and trade periodicals. Authors also use scholarly journal articles with sources like conference proceedings and technical reports. They do this in order to provide a more in depth summary of the latest findings and to include more calculated data. Most authors do their own research based on studies they design. Whether it's through experimentation or real-life simulations.

- ## Point of View and Sentence Style

Those who write in these fields are focused on being clear and having good delivery of their information. According to the Purdue Online Writing Lab (n.d.), “In general, you should foreground the research and not the researchers (‘The results indicate ...’).” Sometimes passive voice is used to emphasize results over the researcher when the writer is less important than the